I suggested that and was discouraged from doing that as they are short staff and this is not really a "negligence" case.

Has anyone suggested child protective services? They're essentially abandoning their child at a location not permitted to accommodate him safely (we can't lock him in a closet), and based on public health guidelines they are compelling him to put himself in danger.

FYI - a 7-year-old refusing to comply... I have contacted the COE, Public health, and legal counsel. The options provided to us resulted in a litigation claim.

[ Name deleted by Epoch Times ] ... is refusing to wear his mask inside the classroom.

His teacher attempted to get him to comply, he refused, she brought him to the office...I attempted to get him to comply and he tells me no and that he is not going to wear a mask.

I've called and left voicemails on both parents phones letting them know about the situation and informing them that he if refuses to wear a mask that I cannot let him in the classroom and therefore they need to pick him up. I asked both to contact the school.
